The Long Hot Summer

In August 2018, the topic of conversation was all too often how hot it was. The really hot summer seemed to begin in June rather than at the beginning of August, which is when the scorching heat usually begins in Japan. By the middle of August this heat had returned again after two days of rain. One day at the small train station near where we live, the station attendant smiled at me as I said how hot it was. Shinjirarenai! I agreed with him.

In the English language news magazine I read that Japan was in a state of emergency because of flooding and landslides. Not only was it having one of the longest periods of very hot weather on record, but the level of water in rivers was rising. Is this what is called “global warming”?

Global warming means that the weather pattern is changing. There are various reasons for this change. Nobody disagrees that 2018 has had a very hot summer just about everywhere. What is not agreed by some people is that there is an entirely new pattern of climate change. Those who disagree can say that in history, for instance, a northern European country like England actually produced grapes for winemaking when it was part of the Roman Empire. Southern England still does produce wine, but wine production is very small because there is not enough sun to allow the grapes to mature. The Romans were very lucky to arrive in southern England when it was having warmer weather thousand years ago. This was certainly not the case for most of the history of England's summers.

The heatwave of the summer of 2018 seems to have been global and regional. The increased warming of Planet Earth has been recorded for a long time. In 2018, huge fires spread across the drier regions of a very large part of the earth: from California to the southern Mediterranean countries of Spain and Portugal. Nighttime temperatures in downtown Los Angeles on July 7th did not drop below 26.1 degrees Centigrade, which is very unusual. Perhaps the biggest surprise was Siberia, an extremely cold region of eastern Russia in the winter. During the summer of 2018, a huge part of Siberia had 80,000 hectares of its forest destroyed by fires. The fires were caused by extreme dryness and continuous heat.

The international consensus is that the extremes of heat are going to become more frequent in the future. Holland, for instance, can now expect very hot weather every two years, according to one Dutch expert. Such hot weather did happen in the past in Holland, but only happened once in 20 years. However, we have to do something about this new pattern of weather as immediately as possible.

(The Economist)

問 1 Will a very hot summer, like the one in 2018, have any effect on a country like Japan?

31

- ① No, not really. It depends on what you feel.
- ② I wonder why. Unusual things happen which are not that bad.
- ③ Yes, certain things may happen which can be disastrous.
- ④ No, the effects of unusual heat can easily be dealt with.

問 2 What does global warming mean, according to this text?

32

- ① It's a regional happening only and is not global.
- ② Extreme heat has been experienced in Siberia in eastern Russia.
- ③ Periods of hot and cold weather happen sometimes.
- ④ Great heat is felt in many regions of the world.

問 3 Why was the example of the Romans making wine in England introduced?

33

- ① To show that long periods of hot weather have always happened somewhere in history.
- ② To argue that there was an ice age during the Roman Empire.
- ③ To explain why wine could not be produced in England.
- ④ To prove that global warming has always been there in England.

問 4 What happened in the summer of 2018?

34

- ① There were only very isolated outbreaks of forest fires in the world.
- ② Fires broke out in some of the wettest and rainiest areas of the world.
- ③ Forest fires were very destructive in the areas with least water.
- ④ Fires broke out during periods of very heavy rain and storms.

問 5 What is important about the changes of weather pattern in Holland?

35

- ① Very hot summers in Holland will happen about once every twenty years.
- ② Holland will not see very much change in the next twenty or thirty years.
- ③ Holland will experience hotter summers much more often than before.
- ④ The pattern of hot summers in Holland is quite normal and expected.

V 次の英文を読み、下の問1～5に答えよ。尚、解答は各間に記されている①～④の内から1つずつ選べ。

The problem of Akiya in Japan

In Japanese an empty home is called an akiya. In every city, town and village in Japan, you will see these empty and abandoned homes. A real estate agent has come up with a new idea to help use abandoned homes in Japan. This real estate agent will purchase an empty home directly from people who have inherited the land from a relative who has died, or from someone who wants to leave the house and live somewhere else. The real estate agent will repair and redesign the empty house. He will lay down fresh tatami mats, fit a new kitchen and bathroom. He will make the house look nice and attractive to anyone wanting to buy a house. Of course, the house is often quite old and has had another owner, and most Japanese still prefer to buy a brand new house, built in a very modern style. Not everyone wants to live in a wooden-frame house with low doorways that you can knock your head on!

The real estate agent has been quite successful. The popular reason given is that refurbished house is simply cheaper. Another reason, but less talked about, is that a lot of Japanese people don't always want to live in an apartment or on a modern housing estate. They would prefer to live in an individual house in a street or alongside a road with a small garden to grow vegetables and flowers in. More and more people want to live like their grandparents of the Showa generation. On television there are now so many "home dramas" about home life for the average Showa family. What is forgotten is that these houses were often quite small, less convenient, and without much individual privacy.

Another advantage of the older house is that there is now more space. Why is that? Well, it is because the Japanese family unit is much smaller today — typically with only two children. Besides, nowadays the family unit may only be a couple living together, or quite often a home for one person living by him-/herself. An older house, refurbished and of course modernized, with bathroom and toilet fittings for the modern taste, is becoming more popular with buyers.

(An article on the Internet about Japanese Housing)

問1 What innovation in housing has been developed by a real estate agent?

36

- ① To create new housing out of older buildings
- ② To leave the older houses as they are
- ③ To build houses where the old ones were
- ④ To abandon the old homes and build elsewhere

問2 What advantage is there for the house buyer in buying a used house, apart from price?

37

- ① There is no obvious advantage in buying an older house.
- ② It depends on the feeling of the buyer about having a big garden.
- ③ It is all about the buyer's taste about what a house should be like.
- ④ An older house is more fun because it has low ceilings and smaller rooms.

問3 What is the disadvantage of an older house, according to the text?

38

- ① There are too many tatami mats.
- ② Space is limited even for two people.
- ③ Too many people cannot live together.
- ④ The height of the door frames is low.

問4 What does “refurbished” mean?

39

- ① Partly rebuilt
- ② Partly painted
- ③ Totally redesigned
- ④ Totally demolished

問5 Can you think of another way of saying “fit” as in “fit a new kitchen and bathroom”?

40

- ① Break up
- ② Put in
- ③ Start up
- ④ Slide in
